WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 30, 1892.

Fall of the French Ministry. The French Ministry under M. Louser, which has just fallen, went into power on February 28, 1892, succeeding the DE FREY. CINET Ministry.

The trouble with it is that the French people believe that many of the millions of francs which they paid to build the Panama Canal were spent in bribing depu-Baron DE REINACH, who died quite suddenly recently and who was under suspicion as one of the agents in the debauchery of the deputies, is believed to have committed suicide rather than face the impending investigation. There has been much public indignation because no post mortem was made or inquest held upon On Monday the Chamber of Deputies adopted a resolution, against the protest and in spite of the explanations of M. Louber, expressing regret that the Baron's papers had not been sealed immediately after his death. Promptly following this hostile action M. Louser and his associates offered their resignations to President Cannor, who asked them to hold their portfolios until other arrangements could be made. The leader in the overthrow of the ministry was M. Barsson, who demands that the investigation of the Panama scandals shall be probed to the bottom, and our latest information is that President Carnor has entrusted him with the formation of a new ministry. So Paris is undergoing one of her periexcitement, and DE odical spasms of LESSETS is no doubt in great agony of mind; but the French money is all gone, and the ditch their engineers dug is altogether worthless. Meantime, the Nicaragua Canal Company is hard at work on the Isthmus of Nicaragua and is growing in strength and in popular confidence.

Funeral Sermons and Mourning. The most marked progress in the matter of funeral reforms, so far as we are able o discover, is in the omission of the long dead once so common in this country. The custom has not been abandoned altogether, nor is it likely ever to be; but great limitations have been put upon it.

Occasions will arise, no doubt, where it will be the duty of the pastor, in view of the open grave, to draw lessons from the life of the person whose funeral he is conducting; but, as a rule, funeral sermons are far less in vogue than formerly. Dr. Hoge, of this city, who has long cast the weight of his great influence against such discourses, on last Sunday whilst officisting at the funeral of one of the bestbeloved members of his flock took occasion to express the wish that when it comes excel every other in the precision of its his time to depart, "not one word be spoken except the words of Scripture, of boly hymns and brayer, and that the services be as simple as may be consistent Washington? There's a question. with propriety.' For ages the funeral discourse was in great part biographical in character. This was more especially the case where the dearer is thirty-four. In Liverpool, howceased was a man of distinction. Now this duty is in a measure performed by acre; in Plymouth there are fifty-eight; the newspaper writer, and while his eulo- | London comes third with fifty-seven. gies are not always well deserved it may be doubted if upon the whole they shoot very wide of the mark.

The editor or reporter generally undertakes to express the public's valuation of the man whose life he sketches. He makes prominent the good and passes lightly over the bad qualities of the subject in conformity with a maxim which has found acceptance in all ages and which has been the general rule in the pulpit, as well as in

In the presence of death, in tender consideration of our own frailties, in our utter inability to read the hearts of men as God reads them, and in our desire to soothe the anguish of the bereaved household, the press and the pulpit both have sometimes

On funeral occasions harsh criticism would shock the public mind and do far story by Thomas Nelson Page which will more harm than good, and yet undeserved appear in the Christmas No. of the Century. praise would be almost as potent for evil. Hence it is that so many pastors have adopted the rule of confining funeral services conducted by them to the ritual of their churches (where rituals have been adopted) or to appropriate selections from the Scripture and hymnals.

We note no very great advance in fune ral reform in the matter of expensive burials and the wearing of costly mourning. When the coffin is ordered, the carriages contracted for, and the lot in the cemetery bought, the household of the de-ceased is in no condition of mind to take a practical view of these matters. The members of it usually yield to the suggestions of their mournful hearts, which urge them to do all that seems possible to honor the dear one gone. Thus expenditures are incurred which they can ill afford, and which often bind the family to poverty for months and years to come. The undertakers-the funeral-directors they are now called-can do much (and some, we know, do much) to check this evil.

As to the wearing of mourning, it is a custom too firmly rooted to be easily over-thrown or readily abated. There is hardly a mother who could forgive herself if she failed to wear black for a dead child. It is deemed respect due the dead-a sacred duty; and in this direction reform will make slow progress. Indeed, all reforms with respect to funerals will make slow progress, for the reason that when they are to be applied the persons who are to adopt them see not clearly, but through eyes misty with tears.

The Rise in Gold-

Archbishop Walse, of Dublin, has become a bimetallist. As was stated in our cablegrams of yesterday, he says not that silver has fallen in price as compared with gold, but that gold has risen in price. The people of India will be ruined if monoetallism is persisted in by the commerpial world. This everybody seems to concode. But it is not so commonly held or said that the Irish people would also be ruined by the British Government's persistence in the same unwise policy. If it can be shown, as we think it can, that it sufficed to pay a much larger debt in 1865 and for years thereafter, then it will be shown beyond a doubt that it is gold which bas cope up, not silver that has gone down.

We are glad to see such men as Archsishop Walsh studying economic prohiems. He evidently has a clear conception of the present monetary crisis. If the Brussels conference is wise it will do some thing to change the present condition of things. It is said that the American delegates are surprised to find how ill-informed the British delegates are; and it is shrewdly suggested that the reason for that lack of information is to be found in the fact that the English people have had no "campaign of education" on this subject.

We have advocated the free coinage of silver only as an experiment. If tested and it fails, it will no longer trouble the people or the financiers. Another Death in the White House-

White House with very few agreeable reollections of it. His administration has been tull of toil and trouble. His disagreement with Mr. BLAINE must have vexed him sorely. Then came the death of his wife, whom, from the death of Mrs. HARRISON, and his death was foreseen for a week or more. In this distress, as in the loss of his wife. the President has the sympathies of the southern people.

The Rothschild Plan-

A Brussels cablegram, dated on Monday ast, says that all the British delegates except Bertsam Curare are known to approve the plan proposed by Mr. Rothschild, and it is now confirmed that Mr. Rothschild an 1 the American delegates are working to-

This is good news if true. Mr. Rotes CHILD'S proposition may lead to a better one. But the mere fact that the leading bimetallist country (the United States) and the leading monometallist country (England) are in full accord and working together for some plan of increasing the use of silver as money is full of promise to all persons concerned in the subject of their deliberations.

The succession that the Chamber of Commerce should make its building fireproof—which it can do at small cost—meets with general favor from the subscribers to the building fund.—Richmond Hamatch.

Will the Disparch inform us how a building is made fire-proof? We have not been able to learn. There are so-called fire-proof buildings, but when the flames come the fire-proof part toes not appear to stand .- Nor folk Landmark. It is not possible to make a building fire proof against all of the inflammable material which may be stored in it; but a building may be made fire-proof agains ordinary fires originating outside of it. It may also be made fire-proof inside if combustible material is not put in there in great quantities. Iron, stone, brick, tiling, &c., do not make food for flames, but they will all crumble and fall under great heat The insurance companies understand the difference between a building that is fire-proof and one that is not, and make their rates accordingly.

And if England adopts the gold standard for India, the whole world will be ruined, we were about to say, but that is too hard a word. The United States Gov. ernment will be in a bad condition because it has an immense silver currency. No-body can foretell the disastrous results that depend upon the proper adjustment of the relative values of gold and silver. Moneyed men may well dread any legislaand often extravagant eulogies of the tion by Congress which would render them the victims of England's shortsightedness.

"Things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another." This seems to be a lesson difficult for financiers to learn.

There are now on the roll of the cavalry troop that is being formed in this county 46 names—minimum number needed to organize, 40. The Virginia Regiment of Cavalry will go to Charlotteavalle Nesca.

Governor Brown, of Maryland, has issued a proclamation in which he recites the inequalities of the present assessment of property and proposes to appoint a commission to draw up a new assessment bill, which will be presented to the Legislature for its endorsement at its session in 1894.

The latter may get something better under the Cleveland Administration, in which event be the Cleveland Administration, in which even is will be eliminated from the contest. Ex-Governor Fitzhingh Lee was spoken of for awhile in connection with the office, but in a recent interview he not only declared that he was not a candidate, but said he was not an applicant for a cature position and would not accept a foreign mission.
